

Helping Your Loved One Say Yes to Senior Living

Compassionate guidance for families navigating the next step.

You're Not Alone

Deciding to move a parent or loved one into senior living is emotional. Whether you're concerned about their safety, health, or daily well-being, it's a delicate conversation — and it's okay to feel unsure about how to begin.

This guide is here to help you gently introduce the idea of senior living in a way that's respectful, collaborative, and grounded in love.

Step 1: Start the Conversation Early

Don't wait for a crisis. Bring up the topic casually and early:

- “How are things going around the house?”
- “Do you still feel safe going up and down the stairs?”
- “Would you be open to checking out some communities together — just to look?”

Give your loved one space to express their feelings and concerns.

---

Step 2: Focus on the Gains, Not the Losses

Many seniors fear losing independence — but senior living can offer freedom, safety, and joy:

- No more home maintenance or isolation
  - Daily meals, activities, and care if needed
  - A safe, social environment they can enjoy on their terms

Step 3: Let Them Lead the Way

Empower your loved one to make decisions:

- Invite them to tour communities with you
  - Let them help choose their floorplan, furniture, or even new hobbies
  - Emphasize that it's their choice, their comfort, and their life

Step 4: Explore Options Together

Not all senior living is the same — finding the right fit makes all the difference. Use tools like our "Find Your Fit" Discovery Quiz to explore which level of care makes sense:

- Independent Living
  - Personal Care
  - Memory Care
  - LifeBridges (Specialized High-Acuity Care)

Step 5: Offer a Trial Period

Try a short-term stay or respite program. This gives your loved one a taste of senior living — without pressure.

- “Let’s try 30 days and see how it feels.”

Many residents fall in love with the lifestyle once they experience it.
